After months of focusing on the nuances of claim construction, the Markman phase and any related summary judgment motions are finally over. Now what do you do as the case heads towards trial? For plaintiffs, how will you convince a jury that your client’s patent has been infringed? For defendants, how will you convince the jury that it was not? How will your jury instructions differ from those of opposing counsel? Perhaps most importantly, how will each side present their client’s story? Join us on November 11, 2003 at The California Club to hear from a distinguished panel of trial lawyers including Ed O’Connor from Stradling Yocca Carlson & Rauth’s Orange County Office, Victor Savikas from Jones Day’s Los Angeles Office and trial consultant Paulette Taylor from Varinsky Associates, as they discuss jury selection and effective themes and strategies to present your patent infringement case to a jury.
